

Writing a Résumé

Objectives

1. Understand the purpose of a résumé.
2. Become familiar with the design, length, and format of typical and alternative résumés.
3. Describe the basic and optional categories of information on a résumé.
4. Develop the ability to write a quality draft of your résumé for critique by others.

Purpose of a Résumé

A résumé is a written document that describes one's qualifications for a position. It is a personal marketing tool used to introduce a potential employee to an employer, while helping an employer screen and choose candidates to interview for hire. Résumés should be unique in both content and format to highlight facts about an individual as they relate to a specific job or position; meaning each résumé submission should be tailored to a specific position and organization. Résumés may include examples of one's educational and experiential work qualifications, as well as unique skills, abilities, and attributes that might be useful to employers. Résumés can be used by candidates applying for work, graduate schools, and/or scholarships, fellowships, or campus leadership positions. This guide will focus on the résumé primarily for a job search.

Traditional Formats

Chronological or General Format

A chronological résumé lists, describes, and dates the details of each job and educational experience separately. Listings under each category are placed in reverse chronological order, starting with the most recent position. This approach is most appropriate if you have extensive, uninterrupted work experience in the area in which you seek employment.

Functional Format

This résumé format consists of selections from your total experience, but only those parts which relate to the job you seek. Under each category, list qualifications, skills, experiences, etc., that logically support your objective in functional areas such as management, research, writing, teaching, sales, human relations, etc. This approach is more difficult to construct but may be more effective in documenting the skills or functions you want to perform, especially if your background is varied.

Combination Résumé Format

Most individuals applying for open positions in today's economy utilize a combined format of résumé. This format takes the chronological listing of experiences from the chronological format and merges it with the emphasis of specific skills and abilities from the functional format. This approach allows individuals to highlight their most relevant information in a format that is easy-to-read and accessible to hiring officials.

Basic Résumé Categories

Professional Objective (Optional)

An objective section is not required, but many individuals do still choose to include it on a résumé. This contains a personal statement defining the specifics you wish to attain via professional work. The objective should be no longer than one to two sentences, and it should be broad enough to cover any suitable employment and to interest a wide array of employers. Yet, it should be specific enough to give an impression of sound career direction. Objectives should be personal, action-oriented, and specific, and they should speak to future goals.

Education

The education section is where you list any degrees, certificates, schools attended, or other educational experiences you have obtained or are currently seeking. The highest level achieved (or the degree you are currently pursuing) should come first and continue backward with other schools attended, degrees earned, or training received. It is not necessary to include high school after sophomore year of college. However, if some items in your high school background show high honors or generally reinforce the career objective, then those experiences may be included. List the names of schools, dates attended or graduation date, degrees earned, and major/minor subjects.

You may also include honors, awards, Dean's list, grade point average, study abroad experiences, and other items which may enhance this section of your résumé.

Experience

The experience section may include full- and part-time jobs, research, internships, volunteer work, summer jobs, special projects, or military experience. It is alright to have multiple experience categories on your résumé if listing experiences in separate categories makes the document easier to read and understand.

List position titles, names of organizations, locations (city and state), dates (month and year), duties, and accomplishments. Present this in a format where the most relevant information comes first. In this section, employers are mainly interested in seeing the degree of responsibility you held and the skills you demonstrated.

Outline your duties in a way that accentuates the marketable transferable skills you gained through the experience.

Identification

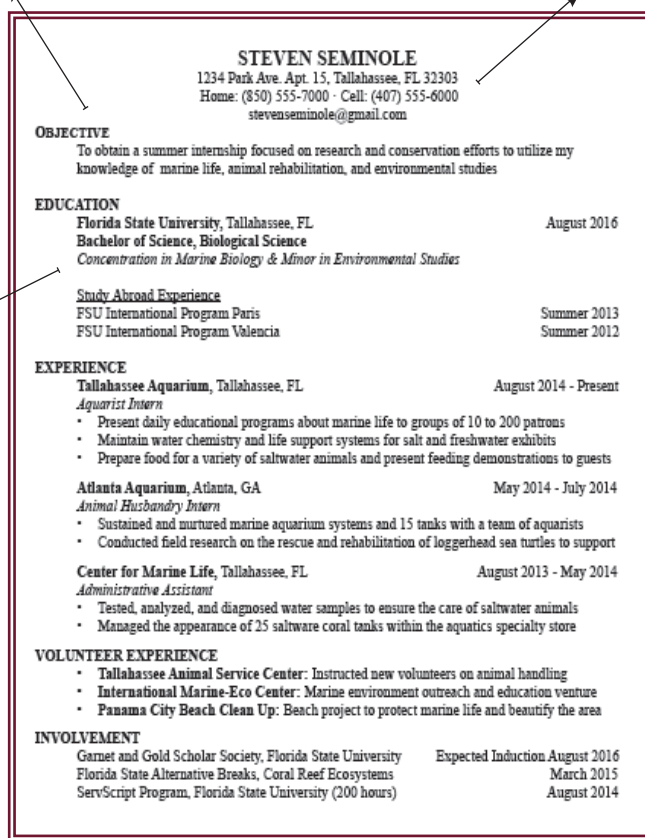

Identifying information, including full name, mailing address, phone number(s) with the area code, and email address are usually included at the top of a résumé (no heading needed). If you are at a temporary address, you can include this in addition to (or in place of) your permanent address. Make sure your email address is professional in nature and does not contain slang or profanity. It is also important to choose a professional email address that you check daily or weekly. Your FSU email address or some version of your name is appropriate, for example, "jane.doe@email.com."

Other Categories

If you have information which you feel is important, but does not fit into any of the above categories, create sections to encompass this information and/or the requirements of specific job targets. You may have categories unique to your field of study, e.g., clinical nursing experience. The key is having categories that best fit the position(s) you are seeking.

Some possibilities for other categories include:

- Activities
- Performances/
- Volunteer
- Certifications
- Art Shows
- Experience
- Honors/
- Special Skills
- Computer
- Awards
- Workshops/
- Skills
- Interests
- Seminars
- Professional

Constructing Effective Experience Descriptions Exercise

Every position requires skills which are transferable to work after college. Effective bullet point descriptions contain references to these skills or describe examples of projects you completed that produced tangible, positive results for an employer. Below is a diagram of two effective bullet-writing strategies. Each bullet point may contain three important elements: an action verb, skill, and tasks that evidence the skill OR an action verb, project, and result produced from the project (accomplishment).

Style of a Résumé

Formatting

Résumés may be designed using a variety of formatting styles. There is not one correct design, but certain elements of the résumé have become standard, while others remain a matter of preference. The following tips are intended to help you create a résumé that may serve your needs and represent your individual qualifications.

The format you choose should attract attention and create interest. Choose appropriate categories that showcase your most relevant and marketable information. As a guideline, it is best to place more relevant experience descriptions closer to the top of the page in most circumstances. You may use CAPITAL LETTERS, underlining, bold face, italics, indentations, and white space to help emphasize and draw attention to important information, but be careful not to overload your résumé with these. To see examples, turn to pages 8-11 of this guide.

Once you have selected a format, be consistent within categories. The résumé should be easy to follow and pleasing to the eye. Make sure margins are even (0.5-1 inch margins recommended), bullets are aligned, and there is a nice balance of text and white space. An easy-to-read font (like Times New Roman or Calibri) is recommended in size 11-12 point. Avoid using Internet or software templates for your résumé as these can interfere with an employer's ability to read the document when sent via email or an online application. It is also best to avoid using color or images unless your desired industry prefers more creative formatting (for example, graphic design).

Length

The length of your résumé depends on the purpose for which you are using it. In the private, non-profit, and government sectors (with the exception of federal government), the traditional résumé length is one page. Multi-page résumés may be appropriate when applying to graduate school programs, scholarships, federal government agencies, or more academically oriented positions.

Keep in mind the idea of "quality over quantity," and select only those experiences which strongly support your candidacy for a particular position. It may be helpful to keep a multi-page master résumé, which documents all of your experiences. You can save different one-page versions of your résumé targeted at particular positions when it is time to apply.

Résumés for posting on the Internet

A common job-hunting practice involves posting résumés on the Internet. There are a few recommendations to consider before posting your résumé:

- It is best to keep lines of text to 3-5 lines or less, including spaces, to ensure readability of your document.
- Employers searching for online résumés typically use keyword search programs to find résumés of interest. If your résumé does not include these words, it may not be retrieved during the search process. To select keywords, read through position descriptions and identify words that indicate a skill, ability, or knowledge-set employers appear to be seeking. Use as many of these words that accurately describe your qualifications. You can also consider specific skills and qualifications necessary for success in the field of interest.
- Keep in mind that the information you place in your résumé will be available to anyone who wants to see it, so carefully consider whether or not to include private information, such as your address and telephone number.

Frequently Asked Questions

1. Should I include personal information in my résumé?

Personal information about age, gender, marital status, and ethnicity is typically not included on a résumé. In fact, many employers become uncomfortable when receiving this information out of fear they may violate federal equal opportunity laws. It is important to note that this information may be necessary when using a résumé to apply for a position abroad. Other information, such as hobbies and interests, should only be included if it is relevant to the position to which you are applying. For example, a person applying for a sales position with Nike might list relevant sporting activities.

2. Do I need to write "References Available Upon Request" on my résumé?

It is not necessary to write this phrase on your résumé in the United States; however, you can do so if you choose. Most employers expect that you will have references available and that they will receive this information either in an online application form or on a separate sheet of paper from your résumé (see example at the end of this guide).

Remember to ask permission before listing an individual as a reference. You may want to provide your references with a copy of your résumé and the position description to which you are applying. Provide this list to the employer only when requested. Your FSU Career Portfolio is a good place to store your references (accessible through portfolio.fsu.edu).

3. How do I save/send my résumé electronically?

Most individuals create their résumé using some form of word processing software to submit applications electronically. When submitting this way, make sure you give your document a professional and easy-to-identify file name (e.g., “JDoe_Résumé_2015.doc” or “Manager_KMSystems_JDoe-Résumé.pdf”). When sending an electronic document directly to an individual, it is best to attach your résumé as a PDF document. When applying to an online applicant tracking system (for example, through an organization’s website), follow any provided directions for file format of attachments (usually a Microsoft Word document is preferred).

4. I’ve never written a résumé before...how do I get started?

If you need help getting started, SeminoleLink (accessible at career.fsu.edu) has a feature called “Résumé Builder” that can help you build a first draft. To start the process, click on the “Create a Résumé” button located under the “Shortcuts” side menu in SeminoleLink. Résumé Builder should be used as a starting point, not as a way to build the perfect document. Individuals are encouraged to bring in their résumé drafts to The Career Center for revision.

Students can access a variety of computer labs on FSU’s campus to create and print their résumés. For information on campus computer labs visit www.its.fsu.edu/Computing/Computer-Labs/. Students and alumni can also use The Career Center’s computer lab located in DSC 1200. If you save your file on a USB drive or hard drive, you can easily update it, but be sure to keep a backup of this file in a safe place so you do not lose your résumé should something happen to the drive. Both the online FSU Career Portfolio and SeminoleLink (accessible via career.fsu.edu) are great places to upload your résumé for safe keeping.

Do’s and Don’ts of Résumé Writing

Do

- Quantify information and give specific skills gained.
- Be brief, clear, and concise. A résumé that is easy to read and well-organized is more competitive.
- Be consistent. Experiment with the arrangement of headlines, captions, indentations, blocks of text, and the use of capitalization and underlining. Then choose a layout which is readable and appealing to the eye and stick with it.
- Be positive. Start statements or phrases with verbs denoting positive actions (see the Sample Action Word List for ideas). Avoid the use of the personal pronoun “I.” Omit negative statements.
- Be honest. Included information should accurately represent you to employers.
- Be careful. Double-check for typos and mistakes in grammar, spelling, or punctuation. Use a dictionary. When in doubt, check it out. Errors in detail suggest careless workmanship.
- Be neat. Balance white space with text when creating your résumé to avoid the cluttered look. Make sure you print a clear, unmarred copy.
- Get your résumé critiqued!

Don’t

- State salary requirements. If asked, research the value of the position and your skills and give a range of mid to high.
- Give reasons for quitting previous jobs.
- Limit geographical considerations unless absolutely necessary.
- Expound on philosophy or values (e.g., religious or political views).
- Offer any negative information.
- Use standard résumé templates found in popular computer software or books as these can cause documents to be misread when submitted electronically.

Hints and Suggestions

Before you begin the task of actually writing your rough draft, thoroughly familiarize yourself with the Do's and Don'ts of Résumé Writing included in this guide. By following these guidelines, you will increase the probability of producing a readable and straightforward account of your unique qualifications. This list represents some standard expectations of modern résumés. However, the résumé is YOUR document, and you must construct it in a way that you feel best presents you to readers. Consider which hints will help you write the résumé most appropriate for your job objective.

Have Your Résumé Critiqued

It is a good idea to have several people critique your résumé. When you are ready, bring your revised draft to The Career Center, and a career advisor will be glad to review it with you.

Résumé Printing

Once you have completed your résumé, you may want to print it on high-quality or linen paper. If you prefer a certain type of paper on which to print your original document, specialty papers are sold at most office supply stores and copy centers. Avoid textured or marbled paper as it does not scan or copy well.

Résumé Examples

At the end of this guide are four sample résumés. These are only intended as examples. Feel free to create a format that fits your own style and career goals. Please note that the font sizes and margins of the sample pages may have been reduced for inclusion in this guide.

Notice that each sample highlights a particular population that might use the sample format. Graduate student résumés may be longer or look more comprehensive than undergraduate résumés. Certain industries may have preferences for how content is presented on a résumé and may have special sections they prefer added to the document (see Specialized Industry example). Use these samples as an introduction to various formatting options, and be sure to visit The Career Center for additional resources and critiques.
